

I notice the company name and some job description details are missing from your submission. To write a truly compelling, personalized cover letter, I'd need:

1. **Company name** - So I can reference their specific mission, products, or recent work
2. **Job description details** - Responsibilities, required skills, and what they're looking for in a Forward Deployed Engineer specifically

A Forward Deployed Engineer role typically sits at the intersection of engineering and customer-facing work, so the cover letter really needs to speak to that unique blend — and the company context shapes everything.

**Could you share:****

- The company name?
- The actual job description (or at least key bullet points)?
- Any specific achievements or numbers from your experience you'd like highlighted? (e.g., "reduced load time by 40%," "led a team of 5," etc.)
- Why you're personally interested in this particular company?

With those details, I can write something that feels genuinely tailored rather than generic — which makes a real difference for a role like this where communication and client-facing skills are being evaluated from the very first impression.
